The thesis focuses on the implementation of community policing conducted by police officers of KLMSP at the level of managerial and operational. Meanwhile, the thesis employs qualitative approach and ethnography method. Data is collected by some methods such as observation, involved observation, interview and documents review.

Community policing is a policing model which emphasizes on the existence of partnerships between police and community in solving problems that exist in the community in order to create and to maintain security and public order so that the quality Life of the community can be improved.

The area of KLMSP has various communities, various ethnic groups, various beliefs, various economies, various social levels and various cultures and politics. Such characteristics, of course, influence the complexity of the problems that exist or will exist within the community. These conditions often threat the security and public order of that area that finally influence the duties of the sector police. KLMSP as a police organization has the duties to maintain security and public order, to enforce the law, and to serve and to protect people residing in its jurisdiction. Lacking of personnel, facilities and infrastructures and sufficient budget change the strategy of the chief of KLMSP in implementing community policing in the area to be in a form of cooperation with people with the name of FKPM in creating public order and security in the area.

The implementation of community policing in the area of KLMSP is based on the policies issued by the Indonesian National Police Chief regarding Community Policing. Community policing is conducted by the chief and staff of KLMSP by socializing the community policing to KLMSP staff and public members, establishing FKPM, empowering police posts, activating the activity of FKPM and the activity of KLMSP Operational Units in supporting the implementation of community policing. The implementation of community policing has not achieved the expected results due to the limitations and obstacles of KLMSP and community residing in the area.

The implementation of community policing conducted by KLMSP has got responses and supports from people residing in the area this can be seen from the participation of community members who belong to FKPM. They actively take part in FKPM programs in preventing crimes and solving problems in the area.
