This research aims to see the correlation between the quality of work life and teaching commitment among teachers. Quality of work live include seven factors: fair and adequate compensation, safe and healthy school environment, opportunity to growth and develop, integration in the workplace, social relevance, supervision and participation. While commitment to teaching include five dimensions: identification with teaching subjects, identification with students, involvement in subject teachings, involvement with students, and loyalty to teaching. This research involved 81 respondents who work as teachers in East Jakarta and Depok. This research used quantitative method with the questionnaire as a data collector. This research found that there is no significant correlation between quality of work life and commitment to teaching. Thus it can be concluded that commitment to teaching can not be explained by quality of work life.
