The recognition of the cultural pluralism by a country and its society is a challenge regarding the existence of its social justice. Multiculturalism is considered as a recent 'innovation' in a democratic society, leading to the social justice despite its various Forms and different implementations in each country. This article depicts the multicultural growths, development and issues in some European countries and the European Community. The Netherlands has introduced combined recognition regarding cultural pluralism and its national integration concept on the basis of the membership of a community. The United Kingdom prioritizing individuals rather than institutional organization is still facing racism issues. France bends to be in the crossroad with the existence of the ideas against the myths presenting social identities. The European Community has been conflicting the identity of Europe.
