This paper has dealt with the way Indonesia has been reacting to the global economic crisis from the period of pre-recession and how they are currently dealing with it. The arguments have been narrowed down to the history of the country and how it has and is still reacting to the crisis. The size of the country, its population and how it sustains or fosters its growth were also put into consideration. Finally, the paper also dealt with its vulnerabilities and how they are likely to recover, not forgetting the economic imbalances during the prerecession period where in the onset of the crisis Indonesia was taken by crisis which made it so vulnerable in the current crunch. All these have been highlighted interchangeably.
