Abstrak

The revocation of the Republic of Indonesia passport according to Article 31 of law number 6 of 2011 on Immigration is an effort by government to limit the maneuverability of Indonesia convicts, suspect and criminal offenders who are at risk of fleeing the country while their crime are still on-going judicial process or while executing their sentences. The confronting issue of the Indonesian government's policy through the Law Number 6 of 2011 on Immigrations is when the revocation of a Republic of Indonesia passport occurs to a holder of Indonesian citizenship who has committed a crime and fled the country. The arising question is "has this provision been implemented effectively to prevent fight or limit maneuverability abroad to force run aways to return to Indonesia?".
