ABSTRACT

The purpose of this study is to determine the effect of value of financial flexibility to corporate financial policy and decision on the non-financial sector in Indonesia. This study conducted to 91 companies from eight sectors, including agriculture, basic industry & chemicals, consumer goods, mining, miscellaneous industry, property, real estate, & building construction, and trade & service using secondary data. The sampling method in this study is using purposive sampling. Statistical test used is panel data EGLS (cross-section weights). The result shows that value of financial flexibility have a significant negative effect to dividend policy on agriculture and property, real estate, & construction. There is significant negative effect between value of financial flexibility to capital structure decision in customer goods sector and trade & service. There is significant positive effect between value of financial flexibility to cash holding in infrastructure & transportation, and trade & service. This indicates that the value of financial flexibility is one of the important considerations in determining financial policy and decision in a company., The purpose of this study is to determine the effect of value of financial flexibility
