ABSTRACT

This study aims to investigate and examine the strategy of the fight for peasantry rights by La Via Campesina, who takes role as a transnational social movement actor as well as ideas for the peasantry itself. As a transnational social movement actor, La Via Campesina is developed from elements of identity, solidarity, common goals, and sustainable collective actions, whose movements ranged from local, national, regional, and international level. Meanwhile, as ideas, La Via Campesina brings up the ideas, values, and norms of the peasantry from local level to international boards to fight for the peasantry rights. One alternative idea developed by La Via Campesina for the fight of peasantry rights is to offer the concept of food sovereignty and agrarian reform to be mainstreamed into the formation of norms of peasants rights which then fought through the institutionalization process of norms of the peasants rights of the La Via Campesina at the Human Rights Council, in order to form peasants rights conventions as a new instrument in the norms mechanism of the UN international human rights that would protect the peasantry rights in the world. The strategy of the fight waged by La Via Campesina in this study is a strategy of campaign, collective actions, mobilization, networking, persuasion, and advocacy, This study aims to investigate and examine the strategy of the fight for peasantry rights by La Via Campesina, who takes role as a transnational social movement actor as well as ideas for the peasantry itself.
