Abstrak

This paper discusses empowerment program for coastal communities in Cilincing subdistrict, North Jakarta. Basically, the program has been relatively successful in developing coastal communities' entrepreneurship. This can be seen from the establishment of cooperatives and small-scale enterprises in that area. But this paper underlines that grant allocation for the fisherman is still limited. Otherwise, the merchants received the most amount of grant allocation. In other words, bias on delivering program has occurred. Furthermore, target location for this program has not been equal yet. It was concentrated on few villages only. Low understanding for loan scheme also became crucial problem for the program. This has resulted in 'bad credit' in a lot of amount.
