ABSTRAK

ABSTRACT

This thesis analyzes the character of Masago, a Heian samurai wife in Rashomon. Using the characterization method, Bordwell and Thompson's theory of film analysis, and concept of gender in Japanese society, this thesis answers the question of how Masago's characters in Rashomon change the image of the thinking of the Heian women. In the analysis, Masago's thinking changes arose through the dialogues, behaviors, and point of view. It is also supported from the movie style aspect which includes mise en scene and cinematography techniques. Masago changed the picture of the thinking of a Heian woman who was attached to a weak and passive stereotype to become an important figure who had a voice in the face of male domination against him.
