This study examines the influence of public service motivation, which is mediated by personalization and person-job compatibility, about the behavior of extra organizational roles and organizational commitment. This research was conducted on employees of public service organizations in Greater Jakarta with questionnaires obtained from 200 respondents from various service industry circles. Previously formulated hypotheses are then tested using the structural equation modeling (SEM) method.

The results of this study are public service motivation has a direct effect on organizational commitment but not directly influence extra role behavior. The compatibility of the organization's people is proven to mediate fully in the relationship between public service motivation and extra role behavior, but partly mediates with organizational commitment. Person-job fit was found to partially mediate the relationship between public service motivation and extra role behavior and organizational commitment.
