After Will's death, her beloved husband, Faye Barlow drowned in such a fray that she was often unable to even go about her daily routine. However, when he got an offer to photograph the South Carolina coast, he accepted. After all, photography is the only thing left on him. In a remote beach town, Faye falls in love when she sees the beautiful Bride Island lighthouse despite being aged. He is also obsessed with the legend about the daughter of the lighthouse keeper who sank mysteriously until she was finally killed in 1921. Like a moth seeing the light, Faye was fascinated by the lighthouse for reasons she herself didn't understand. While visiting her one night, Faye is hit by a sudden wave. Unable to resist that enormous force, Faye is dragged into the past and enters into another woman's love story. His fate can be changed, the wounds of his heart can be restored. However, can Faye love two men at different times?
