This is also the case in Indonesia, where the hotel sector is rife with problems related to high staff turnover. The situation is felt by hotel management companies in Indonesia, including PT. Archipelago International. In this paper, we explore how PT. Archipelago International's hotel employees view the meaning of their work and how it contributes to their work engagement, organizational commitment, and turnover intention, along with the role of work engagement as mediator in the relationship between meaning of work and organizational commitment. Structural equation model (SEM) was used to examine the data. Based on the data collected from 406 hotel employees in Jakarta and Bali, results indicated that employees' meaning of work positively influenced work engagement, and work engagement positively influenced organizational commitment. Work engagement was found to be a full mediator in the relationship between meaning of work and organizational commitment. Additionally, organizational commitment was also found to negatively influence turnover intention. Managerial implications and ideas for future research will be discussed at the end of the paper.
