among its supporters. The goal is to explore the matter of resolving the Palestine-Israel issue more profoundly and evaluate the potential for the one-state solution to emerge as a distinct political movement for the Palestinian people. This research is expected to assess the potential for developing the idea of a one-state solution as a political movement for the Palestinian people in realizing rights that are not protected by the two-state solution, as well as contributing to finding proposals for solutions to the Palestinian-Israeli problem. This research applies a descriptive qualitative research method using a literature review approach, with data collection primarily focusing on the use of books and other literature as the main sources. The result of this research is that the one-state solution concept can be considered as an international political movement to at least ensure equal rights for all Palestinian people.
