.....The human resources of an organization represent a significant factor in its capacity to achieve its stated objectives. The acquisition of high-quality human resources within the organization can be facilitated by enhancing the job satisfaction of its members. Job satisfaction is related to trust. As an institution in the public sector that plays a crucial role in service provision, Polri is expected to provide high-quality services in order to gain public trust. The objective of this study is to analyze the effect of quality of work life and work-life balance on job satisfaction and perceived organizational support. Additionally, the study aims to analyze the role of perceived organizational support as an intervening variable in mediating the effect of quality of work life and work-life balance on job satisfaction variables. This research was conducted using quantitative methods. The sample for this study consisted of 290 members of the Polres Tulang Bawang. The researchers distributed questionnaires in both direct and online formats. The research involved the application of structural equation modeling (SEM) through the Partial Least Square (PLS) 4.0 tool for the purpose of analysis. The findings of this study indicate that quality of work life and work-life balance have a significant effect on job satisfaction and perceived organizational support. The perception of organizational support has a notable impact on job satisfaction. Furthermore, the mediation effect indicates that the quality of work life and work-life balance, as mediated by perceived organizational support, have a positive and significant effect on job satisfaction. The findings of this study indicate that all of the hypotheses proposed in this study are accepted. Additionally, the results of this study demonstrate that improving the quality of work life and work-life balance can be achieved through the implementation of programs designed to enhance family-friendly policies. Polres Tulang Bawang can enhance the perception of organizational support by fostering open communication and the dissemination of timely information, implementing career development programs, and offering member skills training.
