.....This study aims to discuss the background of the Government's reasons for issuing a gradual corporate income tax rate reduction and the policy formulation of gradual corporate income tax rate reduction. This study uses a qualitative research approach with a descriptive type of research. The results of this study are, first, the issuance of a policy concerning corporate income tax rate reduction against the competition in attracting foreign direct investment and competition in tax rates with other countries (race to the bottom). Second, in accordance with the policy preference for gradual corporate income tax rate reduction, the Government is expected to maintain potential losses from tax revenues, as a means of policy dissemination to Taxpayers, and implement the mandate of the Act. Third, the formulation process concerning the policy of corporate income tax rate reduction has gone through the stages of policy problems, policy agenda, and policy proposals. In addition, the policy formulation of corporate income tax rate reduction has met such aspects, namely the target of incentive provision, forms of incentive provision, and in relation to the administrative system.
